Extending Media Literacy Beyond the Classroom to the Post Office

account had been hacked, leaving her without access. The hackers deleted her previous posts and began sharing random, deceptive content, causing confusion among her followers.

One simple text evolved into a big mistake, mentally draining Saniya and leaving her feeling helpless. Upon attending the workshop at her college, Saniya came to a profound realization that media literacy could have safeguarded her and others like her from online scams and frauds. Emphasizing this, she said, also serves as a Project Assistant at the NGO Kites India, a Communications Specialist at Tale8, and a Content Associate at Official Humans of Keralam.

“Media literacy acts like a shield, enabling us to make informed decisions and be responsible when navigating the internet”.

During the UNESCO Global Media and Information Literacy Week in October, her college organized a FactShala workshop on media and information literacy for media and communication students, led by trainer Habeeb Rahman. An inquisitive girl, she attentively absorbed all the information through the workshop, seeking to expand her understanding of the media domain.

While media literacy held significance for them as they were media students, Saniya personally resonated more with the workshop due to her previous encounter with online frauds and scams. Some time back accessible fact-checking tools available to people to stay informed and verify the authenticity of any piece of information. Furthermore, the workshop expanded her understanding of media literacy. She emphasized, “Media literacy is not just about avoiding fake news; it is also about comprehending why it is there and its potential impact on us. Media literacy essentially guides us in being open-minded and respectful in online conversations, allowing us to see and acknowledge different points of view”

Saniya was determined to take her learning forward to people as she thought they could greatly benefit from it in their day-to-day who frequent the post office, and the people they interact with on a daily basis.

Through the knowledge acquired at the Factshala workshop, Saniya, who calls herself "A Girl With Million Goals", achieved at least one of them – inspiring people and making a positive impact on the community, all through the power of media literacy.
