STUDENT ATTRIBUTES FACILITATED BY THE INSTITUTION

The institution conducts diverse programmes related to ethical principles which are to be inculcated by students and faculty in their lives and profession like awareness sessions and orientation on personality development, ethical living, morality, stress management and emotional maturity, leadership skills, personal skills for professional success, cybercrimes and laws, ethical hacking and cyber security, ethical perspectives in content creation, intellectual property rights, research methodology and skills needed for qualitative research.

Through the conduct of such programmes by the institution, students and faculty imbibe universal ethical principles needed for their academic and professional lives irrespective of their disciplines like

- Trustworthiness, accountability, and openness
- Honesty and integrity
- Strict adherence to the laws
- Ability to plan, organize and prioritize work
- Respect for human dignity by thwarting discrimination against others based on gender, race, caste, colour, class, nationality or other factors unrelated to academic and professional excellence
- Reverence for others by doing good for them and avoiding harm
- Objectivity in data analysis, data interpretation and other aspects of research through the inculcation of ethical principles

- Respect for others' patents, copyrights, and other forms of intellectual property rights
- Maintenance of confidentiality whenever needed especially regarding sensitive information
- Social responsibility and promotion of social welfare
- Honest representation of data
- Uphold of prudence by keeping away from careless errors and omissions in research-related activities
- Impartial presentation of data in academic presentations
- Strict adherence to research methodology by avoiding plagiarism and the significance of acknowledgement of contribution to one's own research by proper citations
- Understanding of the relevance of honest publication
- Consciousness to not indulge in cybercrimes
- Persistent efforts to keep up competence in one's own academic life and profession by timely updation and life-long learning

Apart from these, students and faculty also cultivate skills and values needed for personal development with regard to the mental, social, spiritual, emotional and physical aspects of their lives including cognitive, technical, interpersonal, organizational, communication, problem-solving and leadership skills. They also gain self-esteem, confidence, adaptability, integrity, stress management and emotional maturity by the development of their analytical, research and professional skill through various programmes organized by the institution.
